TO

"THE FIRST PRINTERS OF CHICAGO"

In 1927 I published an essay entitled The First Printers of Chicago, which contained a bibliography of Chicago book and pamphlet imprints from 1836 to and including 1850. Since that time a number of additional early Chicago imprints have come to my attention. Some of these I have seen and have thus been able adequately to describe. To several others I have references at second hand.

These new imprints in no way alter the history of early Chicago printing as originally set forth, but they do add to our knowledge of the products of the press. The most interesting by far of those now described herein is Scammon's Reports of Cases argued and determined in the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois, which was printed in Chicago in 1840. While the sheets of this book were in the bindery, practically all of them were destroyed by fire. A note in the copy here described says that only about twenty copies were saved.

At the time that my first essay was published, I searched high and low for a copy of this volume, inquiring from libraries east and west, but without success. The one copy thought to exist was in the George W. Paullin collection, which was not then accessible.

The other imprint herein listed which is of particular interest to me is The Rosarist's Companion, printed by Ellis & Fergus in 1845. This was described to me by Mr. Paullin, from memory, as "The Roseat," and is mentioned under that title on page 22 of my essay. The pamphlet itself came up in the Paullin sale in 1929, and I was thus enabled to get a description of it and also a facsimile of the title page for reproduction here.

I am indebted to Mr. J. R. Canny for collations and descriptions of titles of a number of the items sold by the American Art Association at the Paullin sale in April, 1929. I am glad to acknowledge a special obligation also to Mr. V. Valta Parma, curator of the Rare Book Room of the Library of Congress, and to Mr. Willard O. Waters of the Henry E. Huntington Library, who have contributed descriptions and notes on those titles which are ascribed respectively to each of those libraries.
